Scanning the ground for nails and rocks is like scanning the New York Times

By Jan Hulme

I’ve always been a bit on the lookout for things on the ground. I’m a bit of a treasure hunter, always keeping an eye out for interesting rocks or pieces of metal. I’ve never been one to worry about tripping or falling, just looking for things to add to my collection.

The rocks were plentiful and varied, each one unique. I remember finding a beautiful green stone that I’ve kept as a lucky charm. I’ve also found a few pieces of broken glass that I’ve used to make mobiles for my home.

Scanning the ground can be a fun activity, but it’s important to be careful not to step on anything sharp or break anything fragile. It’s a great way to explore the outdoors and find something new each time.

New Horizons Band announces holiday concerts

ERIE — Holiday music will be everywhere and the New Horizons Band of the Lakes Region is spreading some of the seasonal cheer.

In December, the band will perform a series of concerts throughout the region, kicking off with a concert at the Holiday Inn in Cleveland on Saturday, Dec. 1, and continuing through the month with performances at local venues.

The band will feature a variety of holiday favorites, including classic carols and contemporary holiday music. The concerts are free and open to the public, and donations are appreciated.

For more information, visit the band’s website at newhorizonsband.com.