

Nation's war dead honored in Belmont

Avery Hutchinson, 12, places a wreath on the Veteran's Memorial in Belmont on Monday afternoon as part of the town's traditional Memorial Day observance. The parade and ceremony were hosted by Charles Kilborn Post #58 of the American Legion. Avery is a member of the United States Navy Naval Sea Cadets Corps. (Alan MacRae/for The Laconia Daily Sun) tion WFOR reported.

Vega flagged down a Miami police officer, who he said repeatedly ordered the attacker to get off the victim. The attacker just picked his head up and growled at the officer, Vega said.

As the attack continued, Vega said the officer shot the attacker, who continued chewing the victim's chase and renovate the freight house at the old train station, plant flowers in Torrey Park through the city's Adopt-A-Spot Program, provide annual care of the historic chestnut tree in Torrey Park; organize community events commemorating anniversaries such as the Great Fire of Lakeport 1903 and the 100th anniversary of the Goss Reading Room.

face. The officer fired again, killing the attacker.

Miami police have released few details about the attack, other than confirming that there was a fatal officer-involved shooting. The name of the victim, who was taken to Jackson Memorial Hospital, had not been immediately determined by authorities, said Detective William Moreno. Messages left Monday for a police spokesman were not immediately returned.

A spokeswoman said Monday that the hospital would not be releasing any information about him.

A surveillance video camera from The Miami Herald building nearby captured images of the men's naked legs lying side by side after the shooting.

Vega said the victim appeared gravely injured.

"It was just a blob of blood," Vega said. "You couldn't really see, it was just blood all over the place."
